Upcoming Lectures

Friday, October 13, 2017

The Second Creek War, 1836: Records and Sources

Michael A. Ports, Independent Researcher, will first focus on the conflict itself, highlighting the historical background, the actual campaigns, and their aftermath. Then he will shift focus to the federal, state, local, and other sources and records concerning the war. In conclusion, Dr. Ports will suggest a research methodology for learning more about your ancestors who fought in the war or who were affected by it.

Georgia Archivists' Favorite Collections

Reference and Processing Archivists will share their favorite collections from Georgia Archives holdings. These interesting, unusual, and sometimes under-utilized records provide researchers with critical information often not available anywhere else, and do so in fun and engaging ways. Archivists will describe these collections and share stories of previous and potential applications.

Friday, November 17, 2017 - Special Lunch & Learn

Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Planning for Personal Records

Christine Garrett, Electronic Records Manager at the Georgia Archives, will discuss identifying essential records – records of historical and sentimental value to families and those needed to recover from a disaster – and how to protect records from a disaster before one happens.
